A simple analysis of Joe Garcia's campaign finance report (see attached), shows that Garcia is concealing the source of more than $51,000 in campaign contributions. The decision to cover up the identity of these contributors raises serious questions. Who are these contributors? Are these contributions legal? Were they cash contributions? Did any of these contributions come from outside the United States?

In contrast, Congressman Mario Diaz-Balart has reported every contribution and urges Garcia to stop hiding who his contributors are.

"I believe in sunshine and transparency, and I am proud that my campaign disclosed information for every contribution it received. It is disappointing that Joe Garcia refuses to reveal the sources of more than $51,000 in campaign contributions. I urge him to disclose the identity of all his contributors immediately," said Diaz-Balart.

Garcia has already demonstrated a pattern of distorting and lying about Diaz-Balart's record of accomplishment. Now he fails to disclose who has given more than $51,000 to his campaign. Recently, Garcia was caught off guard when the media in South Florida disclosed that he was having a fundraiser headlined by left-wing radical Congressman Charles Rangel in New York.
